

The Doberman Pinscher: An In-Depth Look at Protection Dogs

A Brief History of the Doberman Pinscher

- Bred by taxman Louis Doberman in 19th century Germany
- Originally created as an imposing but dependable protector
- Gained an international reputation as a supreme working dog
- Excels at police and military canine duty, therapy dogs, service dogs for disabled, searchers and rescuers, and competitive dog sports

Debunking the Doberman's Fearsome Reputation

- Often depicted in films as menacing, leading to a fearsome reputation
- The truth: highly trainable dogs with a sharp and unforgettable presence

The Role of Dobermans in Protection Dogs Worldwide

- Protection Dogs Worldwide trains dogs to live alongside small children and pets
- These dogs will defend their family without hesitation

Selecting and Training Dobermans for Protection Work

1. Select dogs from trusted breeders around the world
2. Raise selected puppies in family environments for six months to assess temperament and compatibility with people and children
3. Train the most suitable dogs for family protection
4. An 18-month process from start to finish

Reasons People Seek Trained Dobermans

- Protection from burglaries, kidnappings, and other threats
- A trusted alternative to alarm systems
- A deterrent for would-be intruders

Doberman's Abilities as Guard Dogs

- Athletic, loving, loyal, and easy to train
- Capable of searching houses, deterring intruders, and protecting their family from various threats
- Commands are required for the dog to act, ensuring safety

The Controversy of Docking Ears and Tails

- Docking ears and tails is done for working dogs to prevent injury during their duties
- For non-working dogs, docking is not necessary and may be considered inhumane

Witnessing a Doberman's Protection Skills in Action

- Training demonstrations showcase the dog's ability to bite and bark on command, as well as respond to various protection scenarios
- The dog can circle and guard their handler, providing a 360-degree barrier against threats
- Commands are necessary for the dog to perform its duties, ensuring the safety of both the dog and its handler

In conclusion, the Doberman Pinscher is a highly intelligent, trainable, and loyal breed that excels in protection work. When trained properly, these dogs can provide unmatched safety and peace of mind for their families. The breed's fearsome reputation is largely undeserved, as they are also loving and affectionate pets.
